HOT TEA & ICED TEAS

Black Tea

Black tea is withered, fully oxidized and dried. Black tea commonly yields a hearty, amber-colored brew. Some of the most popular types of black teas are bold breakfast teas (e.g. English Breakfast, Irish Breakfast) and Darjeelings.

Green Tea

Green tea production endeavors to avoid the oxidation of the tea leaves, in order to retain its natural green color and fresh flavor. In Japan, the leaves are steamed, while other countries will pan-fire or dry it through other methods. It has a more delicate flavor than black tea and often brews up pale green or golden in color

Herbal Tea

Herbal tea is simply the combination of boiling water and botanicals like fruits, flowers, barks, herbs, mints, spices, roots, berries and seeds.

Tea is not to be confused with herbal infusions. While herbal tea or infusions are packaged like tea, infused like tea and enjoyed like tea, they actually do not contain any tea leaves.
